The Editorial Board of Dabeer invites scholarly contributions for a forthcoming special issue on the theme of Environmental Humanities.

In the face of climate crisis, ecological degradation, and urgent sustainability challenges, the humanities play a vital role in shaping awareness, ethics, and cultural narratives of the environment. Environmental Humanities has emerged as a vibrant interdisciplinary field, bridging literature, history, philosophy, religion, arts, law, economics, and social sciences with ecological thought and activism.

This special issue aims to explore these intersections, highlighting how stories, values, and imagination shape our relationship with the natural world. We welcome original research papers, reviews, and critical essays that critically engage with the cultural, ethical, historical, and aesthetic dimensions of environmental thought.

Submissions may address, but are not limited to, the following themes:

Sub Themes:

- Environmental Literature and Ecocriticism
- Indigenous Ecological Knowledge and Oral Traditions
- Spirituality, Religion, and Ecological Consciousness
- Environmental History, Memory, and Place-Based Studies
